2013 Number 1

January 2013

PIioneer PalM Beach: The DeWeys And The South Florida Frontier

is the title for the January program for the Boynton Beach Historical Society scheduled for January 21, 2013 at the Boynton Woman’s Club. This is also the title of the recently published book by two Historical Society members, Ginger Pedersen and Janet DeVries. Janet has written, “Palm Beach’s sunny and idyllic shores had humble beginnings as a wilderness of sawgrass and swamps only braved by the hardiest of souls. Two such adventurers were Fred and Byrd ‘Birdie’ Spilman Dewey who pioneered in central Florida before discovering the tropical beauty of Palm Beach in 1887.” Their story was nearly lost even though this dynamic couple was vital in transforming the region from rough backcountry into a paradise poised for progress. From the isolated frontier they moved to entertaining, among others, the Flaglers, Vanderbilts, Phippes, Cluettts, and the Clarkes. Ginger and Janet have used Birdie’s autobiographical writings from her best-selling books to fill in the gaps of a history untold until now. The authors reveal the unique role of this pioneer couple in founding and building the Town of Boynton.

Dr. Ginger Pedersen is a college administrator and history researcher who received her MS in psychology and her doctorate in higher education at Florida Atlantic University. A native Floridian, she has long been intrigued by Florida history and the history of Palm Beach County in particular. Her earliest Florida ancestor arrived in Florida in 1886. She maintains two local history websites and serves on the Historical Preservation Board of the City of Boynton Beach. This is her first book.

Janet DeVries has lived year-round in Palm Beach County since 1987. South Florida history is one of her favorite areas of interest. Currently she is pursuing an MS in Library Science while serving as a library archivist at Palm Beach State College. Pioneering Palm Beach is her fifth published book. She has in preparation several others, including a cold-case crime investigation book and an historical fiction novel for juveniles. She is First Vice-President of the Boynton Beach Historical Society.

Thanks to all of you for sending in your dues without a separate dues reminder. We hope that those who have not yet renewed or joined will mail in your dues soon. We will include a separate notice sheet in the February Historian.

We are most happy to welcome the following new members among those listed above: Dr. Tim Kehrig, Dr. Richard Raborn, Donald G. Wilkens and Ann Thomas Wilkens, David H. Bludworth, Anthony Rowson, and Randy K. Weeks. We are so pleased that you have chosen to become members of the Boynton Beach Historical Society.

IN MEMORIAM
[We appreciate very much that Raymond Weeks, Sr. sent us the following.]

RAYMOND ERIC WEEKS, JR. Ray, age 64, of Boynton Beach, passed away August 12, 2012. He had resided in Boynton Beach all his life. Ray was employed locally as a banker for over 40 years after attending the University of Florida and graduating from Florida Atlantic University. He began his career with First Bank and closed it with Wells Fargo.

Ray was a 7th generation Floridian whose ancestor, Theophilus Weeks, began service in the American Revolution when only 16 years old serving two and one-half years. Theophilus came to Florida in 1825, twenty years before Florida became a state, and settled in Alligator, now known as Lake City. He may be the only veteran from the Revolutionary War buried in Florida, or in any case, he is one of the very few. Ray’s family, including grandparents and great grandparents, moved to the Boynton area from central Florida in 1934. Ray’s grandfather, Edward Brewster Weeks was employed for 37 years as the Forman of the Lake Worth Drainage District.

Ray is survived by his wife Susan, his father Raymond E. Weeks, Sr., a World War II veteran of 28 years service and a long time member of the Boynton Beach Historical Society, three children—Jason and his wife Melissa, Marci and her husband Jason, Shawn and his wife Stacy, and six grandchildren: Tyler, Caden, Alexa, Camrin, Maddex, Raymond, and Brynn. He also has a brother Randy [a new Historical Society member] and his wife Kathy and niece Samantha Weeks. We are sorry for their loss.

MORE ABOUT THE WEEMS FAMILY

We need to correct where Dr. Nat Weems received his M.D. It was Emory University, not Grady Hospital in Atlanta as we reported. He did work at Grady, possibly as an intern or a resident, and that is where he met Truly Fain who was studying nursing. Also the woman identified on the back cover of the November Historian as Alice Weems, Nat Weems’ mother, may be another relative. Below is a picture of Alice Weems during middle age. The second picture is of Nat Weems with both his elderly parents.

The Historian received a nice comment about the article from the November issue on the Weems family—BB Historical Society member Jim Weeks writes:

“It was a pleasure to read your article on Dr. Weems’ family.

“I graduated from Boynton High School in 1946. For a graduation gift Mrs. Weems gave me a Seaforth for Men, cologne and shaving lotion set. I still have the bottles.

“All the Weems family that I knew were real nice folks.

Jim Weeks"
REFLECTIONS ON A HANDKERCHIEF

By Voncile Smith

While I was stowing away some Christmas linens in an old cedar chest, I came across a bag of lovely linen handkerchiefs that had belonged to my mother. What nostalgia they evoke. The ones Mother had saved showed techniques of stitchery I am unable to name. Embroidery, applique and fancy open stitching were never my forte, although Mother tried periodically to strengthen my skills by buying me a small stamped doily or a chair back or chair arm cover to complete to try to stimulate my interest. I might work part of an hour one day and leave the remainder for Mother to finish months later. Mother never learned to tat which is to make lace by hand, however. The handkerchiefs or scarfs adorned with this complex hand-craft were left to the skilled fingers of my great aunts. Thus, to my considerable relief, I was spared efforts to teach me tatting since I saw these aunts only occasionally.

Embroidered and appliquéd ladies handkerchiefs

Handkerchiefs were a necessity when I was a child. Kleenex and other throw away tissues had not really arrived on the scene; and had they been available, few families' limited budgets would have permitted their purchase. I carried a handkerchief to school every day, the 25 cent piece with which to buy my lunch in the school cafeteria securely knotted in one corner. I stowed this treasure safely in a back corner of my desk having no fear that anyone would take it. We were in the same classroom all day, except for lunch and recess when everyone left the room together. But theft was really not a problem at that time. People left their houses, often for long periods, without locking them. Windows were unlocked and open most days when the weather was pleasant.

Flu and cold season [most people did not know the concept of seasonal nasal allergies] was a problem. Often children with runny noses came to school with a man's white handkerchief safety-pinned to the front of their shirts or dresses. The boys derisively referred to these as "snot rags," and sometimes belittled my pretty lady's handkerchief with a similar epithet. If one had a runny nose, the lace and embroidery were rough impediments to comfort, and a small handkerchief was soon overcome by the moisture of a truly leaky nose. I had been taught not to share my handkerchief, but some children did. Adults assumed that what was going around would be caught anyway, so sanitation was not a serious consideration.

Handkerchiefs were also inexpensive, handy gift items. Even three or four men's handkerchiefs were available neatly displayed in gift boxes in Woolworth's or McCrory's for less than $1.00, and individual handkerchiefs could be purchased for as little as 10 cents. For Christmas, I always received at least two boxes [8 or 10 inch square, very shallow, cardboard containers designed to show the contents to best advantage]. And my standard gift to both my parents and to my grandparents was determined by limited cash and a recognition that the times demanded a recurring new supply of "hankies."

Another inconvenience of handkerchiefs was that they had to be washed and ironed. One shortcut was to take the damp, freshly washed item and plaster it against a clean window pane to dry. The moisture held it in place and eliminated the need for ironing.

The disadvantages of handkerchief use have reduced their availability. I know few, if any, women who still carry them, and even though some men still stick one in their pockets, perhaps out of habit, they still prefer a small packet of disposable tissues when wiping their noses. Utilitarian aspects of the handkerchief have essentially vanished, and even carrying a handkerchief for decorative purposes is no longer in vogue. Perhaps the best available stock is now found in antique shops.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS MEETING

The Board of Directors did not meet in December. The January meeting will be Monday, January 28, 2013, 6:30 p.m. Board members will be sent an email before the meeting designating the location, and the location will be posted on our website before the time for the meeting.

Any member of the Boynton Beach Historical Society in good standing is welcome at any meeting of the Society. A non-Board member may participate in the discussion of the Board, but cannot propose or vote on motions. Items still under consideration are the expenditure of the Harvey E. Oyer, Jr. Memorial Fund, and the conditions for the archival repository.
This timeline was sent by Maxine Keatts Lansford via Historical Society members Ben and Judy Keatts. It was apparently prepared in the late 1970s through recollections by the four men named at the bottom. Some of the last dates listed are somewhat difficult to read on the copy sent us—Ocean Ridge became town 1932, Second bridge over canal 1933, FECRR back to single track 1977, 15th Ave bridge built 1967. The “(Now Bean’s)” comment after First Woman’s Club built was before the City saw fit to demolish the building several years ago. Also following Woolbright Homestead Built, “(Now Merckle)” was the site of the Merkle Orchid Nursery and the home of Norman and Rebecca Partin Merkle. The property was sold and the land converted to condominiums.
